

ABSTRACT

A method of energetic medicine wherein a practitioner corrects faults in various functional categories of the system that controls vegetative functions in the body of the subject. The method is comprised of the steps of applying specific clinical algorithms consisting of queries and corrective statements to assess and then train this system toward optimal function. The medium by which this is achieved is verbal and/or other than conscious communications from the practitioner to subject, as well as application of physical stimuli. Communication from subject to the practitioner is determined by monitoring an indicator of autonomic function.